Nolen: Increase in CRI budget not to blame for rise in student fees

By Joshua Edmonson
Senior Staff Writer

The budget for Campus Recreation and Intramurals may increase by more than $200,000 in 1998, but university officials say this increase is not solely responsible for the $4 increase in the student activities fee.

Jack Nolen, vice president of student affairs, said that the CRI budget increases are a part of the proposed fee increase, but not the only reason for the increase.

"Students need to understand that the student activities budget [committee] passed this increase with the hope the money would last a few years and they wouldn't have to spend every dime," he said.

Nolen said that the leftover money would carry over into next year's budget so that the fee would not have to increase again.

CRI receives around $11 per quarter from each student's activities fee.

CRI's current working budget is $584,486 with a proposed working budget of $784,833 for 1998.

The CRI budget is broken into three categories: administration, operations and sport clubs.

The administration budget is solely for the purpose of paying workers salaries. The current administration budget is $293,124 with a proposed administration budget for 1998 of $388,430.

"All professional salaries for any campus recreation staff are paid for by the $20,000 and $25,000 to give the CRI employees their increases," Nolen said.

Ehling said that CRI is granted the six percent increase and since CRI salaries are paid by the students, it is necessary for the money to come from student fees.

--JOHN NOLEN,

students," William Ehling, recreation coordinator, said.

Nolen said that the salaries could be paid through state funds, but when the decision was made on how to pay the salaries, CRI was far down on the university's list of priorities.

One factor that led to the proposed increase in CRI's administration budget is the six percent pay raise given each year by the state, Nolen said.

"We have built into the CRI, if the university gets the six percent increase [pay raise], it is going to cost between CRI also adds one staff member per year as the program grows causing increases in the administration budget, Ehling said.

All costs that are not either salaries or money given to sports clubs fall under the operations budget. CRI's current operations budget is $265,534 with a proposed operations budget for 1998 of $361,973.

"The largest percentage of operations is student salaries," Ehling said.

The operations budget is supporting more than $225,000 in student salaries, Ehling said.

CRI currently has more than 220 student employees, but CRI can employ more than 300 student employees during the peak sporting times.

The sports club budget is money given to the different sports clubs. CRI currently has a sports club budget of $25,828 and is asking for an increase to $34,430 for 1998.

Ehling said that CRI is able to generate some revenue from the highest priced events put on by CRI. The revenue comes from the $30 team registration fee.

CRI also rents outdoor equipment and operates a rope course to help generate money.

The revenue made by CRI goes back into the operations account to help alleviate the strain on student money, Ehling said.

Ehling said that the operations budget that goes before the student activities budget committee does not include the generated revenue.

CRI is looking into several options to raise money so that all of its budget will not have to come from student money.

CRI is working with the university to initiate a major fund-raising campaign.

Pamela Pierce steps down as director of financial aid

Pierce says decision is strictly a career move

By Kevin Bonsor
News Editor

GSU will begin searching for a new director of financial aid this week. The current director, Pamela Pierce, will be stepping down at the end of this month to take a job as a consultant with Systems and Computing Technologies.

Connie Murphey, the associate director of financial aid, will be the acting director while the university looks for a replacement.

Murphey will report to Jack Nolen, vice president of student affairs and to Melanie McClellan, associate vice president of student affairs.

Nolen said he and McClellan will assist Murphey with the workload, specifically with the management of financial aid, during her interim term as director.

Beginning this week, the university will begin a national search to find a new director, Nolen said.

He said they will narrow the selections to three or four choices and pick from those final candidates.

"We hope to have someone to fill the position by July 1, if not before then," Nolen said.

Currently, there are no candidates for the position.

The job is open to anyone who wants to apply for it, Nolen said.

Pierce, who has been at GSU since June of 1995, said she will be a consultant to Systems and Computer Technologies on the BANNER system.

She said that her decision to step down was strictly a career move and that she doesn't have any grievances with the university.

"This move is a professional decision that I see as a good career move," Pierce said.

Nolen said Pierce's work with the BANNER system resulted in her being hired by the company.

Students doing internships no longer required to pay university fees

By Farrah Senn
Assistant News Editor

Beginning this spring quarter, students doing internships and taking less than six hours credit will no longer be required to pay university fees after the President's Cabinet determined that the current Board of Regents policy regarding fee exemptions was too complicated to administer.

"We determined that it was almost impossible to monitor and determine who would and who wouldn't be eligible," Jack Nolen, vice president of student affairs, said. "There were just no easy solutions."

The current policy, which was passed last year by the Board of Regents, exempts students who are doing internships 50 miles or more from their institutions because typically they are not able to take advantage of the services funded by these fees, which include health, activity and athletic fees.

GSU had problems in developing a method to determine which students were exempt from the university fees under this policy, which went into effect this fall, and requested a postponement until this summer.

Postponement was denied, and students who were found eligible for fall and winter quarters are being reimbursed.

"We did not have all of the mechanics in place at the beginning of this fall so the business office refunded the students," Nolen said.

The Cabinet had assigned a team to develop a method of determining who was exempt by the 50-mile policy.

After questions arose on how to determine what to consider 50 miles, it was decided that it would be much simpler to exempt all students doing internships.

"There were going to be too many upset students and too much confusion, so we just decided to do it the other way," Nolen said.

Approximately 300 to 400 students do internships each quarter and it is estimated that the exemption will cause a $200,000 loss of fees annually, Nolen said.

"Our budget is going to be reduced by a certain amount, and we're going to have to find a way to make up for it," he said.

Conference addresses 'needs of the sports management students'

By Carolyn Wynn
Senior Staff Writer

The various speakers at this past weekend's Sports Management Conference addressed the concerns and trends of the sports arena and revealed the secrets of their own success.

During the conference, which was hosted by GSU, attendees had the opportunity to interact with the speakers one to one during the breakfast and lunch periods.

Speakers had a chance to give useful information on breaking into the market, and students had a chance to make connections which may help to further their respective careers in sports.

"We first developed this conference to address the needs of the sports management students," Larry McCarthy, one of the conference coordinators, said. "It gives students the opportunity to network and learn from industry leaders."

The conference featured speakers such as GSU alum and president of the Senior PGA Tour Tim Crosby, John Allen, chief executive officer of the Cin-

Legislature debating tougher drunk driving standards

By January Holmes
Staff Writer

The Georgia State Legislature is debating a bill that would restrict the privileges of teenage drivers and toughen drunk driving standards in the state.

The Automobile Teenage Act of 1997 is scheduled to go into effect July 1 of this year if it passes. The bill would amend title 40 of the Official Code of Georgia Annotated, which relates to motor vehicles and traffic.

The new law would prohibit certain persons under 18 years of age from driving between the hours of midnight and 5 a.m. unless the person is lawfully married, going to a school function, a job, a hunting expedition, or the presence of an emergency arises.

"The intent of this bill is to introduce an element of caution into young people and try to save lives," Senator Jack Hill said.

"We want to remind teenagers that a driver's license is a privilege, not a right."

More than 30 states currently have some kind of a teenage driving bill in effect.

The proposed law would establish a graduated drivers' license system requiring new drivers to maintain a clean driving record for one year before being granted full driving privileges.

Captain Russell, of the GSU Division of Public Safety, supports the bill.

"It will help solve a lot of hardships," Russell said.

Russell said the law will alleviate hardships because the different rules many teens will have to become accustomed to should reduce accidents.

Tougher drunk driving standards are also contained in the bill.

Zero-tolerance of alcohol would be established for drivers below the age of 21, while eliminating the no contest plea in DUI cases.

The full driving bill was endorsed by the Parent Teachers Association, the American Automobile Association and Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

"In looking at the trend over the past few years, the fatality rate is higher for teens to be involved in a car crash," Joleen Forehand, a member of the MADD chapter in Statesboro, said.

The bill would also restrict the number of passengers a teenager is allowed to have in a car.

"Having a lot of passengers influences peer pressure with younger people," Forehand said.

Forehand said she hopes to see the Georgia Legislature bring driver's education courses back into high schools across the state.

Couple pays for water they don't use

The Associated Press

MOBILE— Angela and James Lambert don't understand why they should pay $4 a month for access to city water that they don't want or need. The Hollinger's Island couple is perfectly happy with their backyard well.

The city of Mobile's Board of Water and Sewer Commissioners notified the Lamberts in a Feb. 3 letter that they will have to pay a minimum of $4.09 a month for city water, even though they are not connected to the city main.

"I think it's an unfair charge," Mrs. Lambert said.

"The cable company goes down the street and we don't have cable but they don't bill us. The gas company runs a line down the street and we don't have gas but they don't bill us."

But the water board's director, Jim Fibbe, said even if the residents don't shower or cook with water from the city lines, there's still the issue of fire protection. The city paid for fire hydrants throughout much of Hollinger's Island, he said.

The Lamberts do pay a monthly fee for sewer service to the Mobile Area Water and Sewer System.

"When we got sewer service, water wasn't available," said Mrs. Lambert, a nurse. "We still don't have plumbing running to the street."

For water, the couple has relied for 18 years on an electric pump-operated well near their modest one-story home facing Mobile Bay.

Mrs. Lambert said it has been a few years since the water main was put in the neighborhood, and wondered why the board is just now requiring her and her husband, a sheet-metal worker, to pay for access.

Fibbe said that without the fire hydrants, which are connected to the city water line, homeowners would have to pay more for fire insurance.

He said the board sent notices to 19 residents who had sewer service but were not connected to the water line.

The board has no plans to make the $4.09 fee retroactive, Fibbe said.

"It's sort of like a 911 fee you pay on your phone bill. You may

Strange resources used to keep plane in the air

The Associated Press

OGDEN — Three South Ogden men used all their resources, leftover coffee, a can of soda and the contents of their bladders, to land their single-engine aircraft safely after its hydraulic fluid leaked out.

He told the passengers where to find the hydraulic fluid reservoir and told them to dump in any liquid they could find.

"He said 'coffee, Coke, blood, pee, whatever,'" Harmon recalled.

Strahan said he put leftover coffee and a can of pop in the reservoir. When that failed to do the trick, the three men passed around a cup.

"We had to urinate into this big cup and ... fill the reservoir that way," Strahan said.

Sure enough, the plane's landing gear slowly went into place and the aircraft touched down without incident.

After a safe landing, the three men leaped out and kissed the ground, Harmon said.

Honest cabbie receives reward

By Angie Bluethman
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — David Hacker had just finished his 10-hour shift driving a cab when he spotted a bulging alligator-skin wallet on the back seat.

It held $25,000, what Hacker normally makes in a year.

"This is it," Hacker thought, considering it a test from above.

A few years earlier, Hacker had made a promise to return the favor if God would help him through some health problems.

Hacker tracked down the owner and was rewarded with $5,000 in cash, food and clothes, and a whole week living the high life.

Credit cards in the wallet bore the name of Lance Dykes.

Hacker believed it could have been a passenger he picked up from Bally's.

Sure enough, he found Dykes at one of the casino's roulette wheels.

Dykes, 38, from Hinesville,

Ga., said he had realized the wallet was missing but figured it was long gone.

"In Las Vegas, I just couldn't believe someone would turn it in," Dykes said of his Feb. 11 encounter. "I was almost speechless. I must have told him 'thank you' a 150 times."

He also handed Hacker a wad of reward cash.

"Take the rest of the week off," Hacker said Dykes told him. "You're my guest."

Hacker, 45, spent last week with Dykes, gambling with the high rollers and eating lobster in an expensive suite.

"It was the first time for me," he said. "I'd never eaten lobster before."

Hacker and his girlfriend were also treated to shopping, another gourmet meal and front-row seats at a Las Vegas show.

After Dykes left town, Hacker went back to his cab.

"It was a wild weekend," he said. "I enjoyed the good life, but it's nice to get back to reality."

Entire household sold for $300

By Jay Reeves

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Antoinette Broomfield returned home to find everything she owned gone: furniture, electronics, even her curtains.

It wasn't robbers. Police say a houseguest, a friend of her daughter's, sold it all for the take-it-away price of $300, and that her daughter did nothing as movers carted everything out the door.

"I keep asking her why she let it happen," Mrs. Broomfield said.

"She has a little mental problem. She's easy to influence. I can't get angry with her."

Police were looking for Amy Chere Watts, 23, who was living at the home while Mrs. Broomfield, 45, was staying with her parents to care for her ailing father.

Watts, a friend of Mrs. Broomfield's 19-year-old daughter Tiesha, found an unsuspecting buyer and told him the owner of the house had moved and left the belongings behind, police said.

Neighbors said they saw several people moving items out a day earlier but did not know what to do.

When police tracked the belongings to the buyer, Mrs. Broomfield received her second shock.

"I didn't know whether to cry or pass out," she said.

"They had the living room fixed up just like mine. It was so pretty."

Our Opinion

Exempting interning students from fees is commendable

The GSU President's Cabinet should be commended for the decision they made this month to exempt students who are doing internships and taking less than six hours credit from paying university fees.

It is just common sense not to charge someone for services that he or she is not going to receive, and really this is something the university should have realized a long time ago. But, as the saying goes, better late than never.

The university fees include the health fee, activity fee and athletic fee.

If a student is interning in Atlanta, it is highly unlikely that this student will drive for four hours to come to GSU for his or her health services. Actually, then, if these students are charged university fees, not only are they not going to receive the services from GSU, they have to pay someone else for the services elsewhere.

This new plan goes further than the former policy which only exempted students who were interning 50 miles or more away from campus. Granted, most students doing internships are probably farther away than 50 miles, but it is not fair to charge some intern students fees and not charge others.

Officials estimate that the exemption will cost GSU $200,000 annually. It's refreshing to see university officials make a decision that will benefit students, despite the amount of money it will cost the university.

Older parents should consider the needs of the children

Take a minute to imagine this scenario. You are walking down the street and spot an older, gray-haired woman pushing a baby stroller. You smile at the sight of this grandmother and grandchild spending quality time together. Then, to your surprise, the woman stops, removes the child from the stroller, and says "mommy loves you."

With new medical technology, more women are waiting to have children until late in life. Last week, a 50-year-old woman gave birth to quadruplets. After years on fertility drugs, some people view these births as a testimonial to the triumphs of medical science. On the other hand, I see this situation from an entirely different perspective.

My mother gave birth to me in 1976. At the time, she was 38 and my father was 40. Now, this does not seem out of the ordinary, but in 1976, the doctor advised my mother to have an abortion because of her age. I love my parents with all of my heart, and I am definitely thankful that she didn't follow the doctor's advice. However, being the child of older parents is difficult.

The hardest problem for children of older parents to deal with is facing the reality that their parents may die before seeing them reach adulthood. I realize that death is not something that only happens to the elderly. However, children of older parents may be forced to learn about hospitals, heart attacks and cancer before they have grown out of diapers.

ALETHA YOHO

My father suffered his first heart attack when I was still in elementary school. My friends, whose parents were in their 30's, did not understand what I was experiencing. I was alone.

My parents and I have a great relationship. I wouldn't trade it for the world. In fact, their age has been the source of a lot of my family's most funny stories.

For instance, the principal of the school I attended for seven years once told me that she had a conversation with my grandfather. I was confused at first because my grandparents lived in Texas, but then I realized she was talking about my dad. I laughed and said "You mean my father."

Mortified by her mistake, the principal apologized profusely by saying "Oh, I am so sorry. All these years I thought they were your grandparents. Please don't tell your mother."

On the surface, this may seem humorous, but most everyone I knew assumed that my parents were my grandparents. Some children even teased me about it. When I was in elementary school, my classmates thought my family was weird because my parents had gray hair and wrinkles.

I am sure people are saying "you could have never been born." I definitely would choose life over nothing, and I'm sure this is the choice others would make.

What I am trying to illustrate is that parents should try to understand what the child's life will be like. Granted, it is definitely better to be born in a house with older parents who love you than into an abusive home.

The atmosphere of the home, however, is different for these children. Aging parents have little contact with the younger crowd. Children find themselves around discussion of arthritis rather than playtime at the Jones'.

Also, I understand that many women, like my mother, do not plan on having children so late. I can even sympathize with parents who have their first child late in life.

What bothers me the most is parents in their 40's and 50's who have other children but still insist on adding to their families. For example, the 50-year-old woman who gave birth to quadruplets already had seven other children. In fact, the woman already had grandchildren. Some parents believe that they want more children.

I have a friend whose parents were older than mine when she was born. At the time, they thought a new baby was a wonderful idea.

But when my friend was in the middle of adolescence, they told her "we are tired of being parents. We are ready to spend time for ourselves now."

Well, they should have thought about that 16 years ago.

Education majors aren't necessarily taking the easy way out

I've noticed a trend which troubles me.

As a society, we tend to devalue teachers and prospective teachers by assuming that these individuals are not smart enough to make it in the "real world."

Need proof? We have that age-old expression that goes something like this, "Those who can, do and those who can't, teach."

We've also related this stereotype to college students who are training to be teachers.

Just the other day, as a matter of fact, I found myself explaining to a professor, no less, why I chose to be an education major.

Actually, I'm quite accustomed to justifying my choice. When I first decided to become a teacher, my family and friends tried everything save twisting my arm to make me change my mind.

"But you're too smart to be a teacher," they claimed.

"Why don't you become a doctor or a lawyer?" they asked.

This is the argument that has always thrown me for a loop. Shouldn't our teachers be smart? I can't speak for anyone else, but I would like my children to be taught by intelligent teachers.

Criticizing students who choose to become teachers and making them feel stupid is not the way to recruit a more intelligent crop of future teachers.

AMANDA CREWS

EDITOR

Anyway, back to my discussion with that professor. When he put me on the spot, I was iam Shakespeare or Edgar Allan Poe, but would that necessarily help my students?

If I learned all there is to know about literature and writing but nothing about ways to communiarmed and ready to defend myself.

IF I LEARNED ALL THERE IS TO KNOW ABOUT LITERATURE AND WRITING BUT NOTHING ABOUT WAYS TO COMMUNICATE THAT KNOWLEDGE TO MY STUDENTS, I WOULD NOT BE PREPARED TO DO MY JOB.

He told me the common perception is that education majors have taken the easy way out. He suggested that by majoring in English and then becoming certified to teach, I could gain more respect.

Perhaps he is right. By majoring in English instead of education, perhaps others might assume I am more intelligent and perhaps I might know a few more bits of information about Will-this professor complained that many students in freshman English classes have a difficult time putting sentences together.

I pounced on this opportunity. If college freshmen, who presumably were at least in the top half of their graduating class, cannot put sentences together, is it safe to assume that the bottom half are capable of absorbing any information that is thrown at them?

My answer is no, and that's the reason I see the benefit of education classes.

In all fairness to those who argue that education majors have taken the easy way out, I must admit that education classes, to me, seem almost too easy. The education class I am taking now bores me to death. I am not challenged at all, and I feel like the teacher treats us like eight-year-old children.

I am learning, though. I learn new teaching strategies all the time, and I get a feel for the methods I plan to use and the methods I would never consider using in my classroom.

I believe that ultimately these education classes will help me help my students, and if that means I have to endure being stigmatized as stupid or lazy, I will do so with no regrets.

Statesboro would be dead without GSU

Editor,
I have been reading how the school and the community don't work together and how things would be better if they did. The town still lives in their fantasy world in which they don't need the school to stay alive. They supported this theory with an article in a newspaper a number of months ago.

The article discussed how the town made X amount of money from tourism and that only a small bit was attributed to the presence of the school.

An example included the Aaron Tippin concert and how much money was made from it. The article stated it had nothing to do with the school.

Excluding the fact it was held on campus, in Paulson Stadium, it had little to do with the school.

I have a plan. To prove the impact we have on the community, let's not attend GSU during the 1997-98 year. It can survive, right?

Well, take the population and subtract 14,000 students. Still not too bad. Then, subtract 3,000 faculty and staff members. Oh, when they leave, so do their spouses. We are up to 20,000 fewer people, but then the town is still doing fine.

When the faculty left, they took their children out of the local schools, which caused their employment to decrease. The local landlords are hurting for money as well as the utility companies.

But the town can survive just fine, though.

All the local restaurants and food stores can't survive on less than 10,000 people, so they close and their employees leave.

And what do we have here? A farming town with 5,000 people.

Just like it was before the school was here.

Sure it can survive, but it will be in a coma.

History can't be changed simply because it may be offensive to some

Editor,

This is in response to the column, "Let's hope we're not headed for another War Between the States," published in the Feb. 18 issue of The George-Anne.

I'd like to start off by saying that what happened in New York could easily constitute as much of a childish act as what the two senators from Georgia did.

Removing the Georgia flag because it's found offensive? I know, while we're at it let's go ahead and chisel General Lee, Stonewall Jackson and Jefferson Davis from the face of Stone Mountain.

Then, next we could just burn the rest of anything else that has to do with the history of this country and start history now so that we don't offend anyone else that can't deal with what this country has gone through.

Another thing is the comment made by Gov. Pataki of New York talking of how Georgians were still upset over the loss to the Yankees in the World Series. Let's stick to the topic at hand Governor, that being the issue of offensiveness, not baseball.

We all know that if it wasn't for Jeffrey Maier (the kid who caught the "homerun" ball in the ALCS), the Yankees probably wouldn't have even made it to the World Series anyway.

The real topic is about the history that surrounds this country. This country has so much history behind it and now people are at the point that they are ready to throw it all away because it offends someone.

You can't change the past. What's done is done.

I think that it's about time that people who are offended by what's part of the history of this country might need to find another country to live in.

GSU SOFTBALL

Lady Eagles take four games in two days to even up record

GSU takes down Charleston on Thursday

By Dennis Stovall
Staff Writer

The GSU softball team continued their recent winning ways by defeating College of Charleston twice last Thursday. The Lady Eagles won the first game, 6-1, and the second game 9-1, to even their record at 6-6 on the young season.

In the first game, the Lady Eagles were led by strong pitching from junior Mandi Dunn.

Starting her sixth game of the season as the GSU ace, Dunn pitched seven strong innings, allowing one run on four hits. Dunn also struck out two and walked one. With the win, she evens her record to 3-3.

Offensively in the first game, the Lady Eagles had six hits and were helped out by five Cougar errors. Only two of the six runs allowed by the Cougars were earned.

Second baseman Ashley Flemming and third baseman Amy Cook had the only two RBIs for GSU. In the fourth inning, what was supposed to be a suicide squeeze play turned out to be Flemming stealing home.

In the seventh, Jaclyn Kaylor made an error on a routine ground ball, but she redeemed herself with a spectacular diving catch.

Great defense continued into the second game. In the first inning, Tonya Whitted tracked down a fly ball and made a Willie Mays type over-the-shoulder catch. In the bottom half of the inning, Whitted led off with a double and from there the rout was on.

As good a hitting performance as the Lady Eagles had for the second game, they had equal or better defense and pitching. GSU committed no errors for freshman pitcher Jennifer Miller. With no errors behind her, Miller only gave up one run on two hits.

Freshman outfielder Kristen Steigenhofer was the offensive player of the game. Steigenhofer, in this game, had three hits, a walk, knocked in two runs, scored one and also stole a base.

"Dunn and Miller both did an excellent job," GSU coach Kelley Kirkland said after the double-header. "Defensively, we played good. When we play good defense it is easier on our pitchers to pitch. We have to stay focused and play our level of ball."

Wednesday pounding of CSU lifts Lady Eagles

By Mike Davis
Sports Editor

Lady Eagles pitching ace Mandi Dunn is not at a loss for words when it comes to Jennifer Miller, a freshman and the number-two hurler on the young GSU team.

"Awesome," Dunn said. "She's so strong."

The dynamic duo teamed up Wednesday in sweeping visiting Charleston Southern to give the Lady Eagles their first sweep of the season. Dunn hurled a two-run gem against the visitors to win the first game, 6-2, and Miller threw a mere three-hitter in game two to take a 7-1 win.

"When we don't make mistakes on the field, we can win every game," GSU coach Kelley Kirkland said. "We gave Mandi and Jen solid defense out there today, and when we do that, we're tough."

GSU pounded out three runs in the first inning to welcome the visitors. With runners on second and third after a CSU wild pitch, first baseman Sherri Russo connected on a double down the right-field line to plate both runners. An Ashley Flemming RBI single would later score Russo.

Dunn ran into trouble in the Charleston Southern half of the fourth inning, as she loaded the bases with no outs after giving up a double, single and a walk in handing the Lady Bucs their first scoring threat of the game.

But Dunn didn't fold, as she put down the next three batters on strikeouts.

"I've got a lot of confidence in her in those situations," Kirkland said. "She just beared down, and I swear it looked like she was throwing it a little harder than usual."

The Lady Bucs wouldn't strike again, as three more GSU runs in the sixth capped the home win. Tonya Whitted's double with the bases loaded kept the trains moving as the Lady Eagles iced the game.

Russo went 2-for-2 in game one, while Flemming and Beth Dance both hit 2-for-3 to lead the Lady Eagles.

Game two became a little warmer, as hard-throwing Miller brought the heat for the Lady Eagles.

Dunn supplied the support from the bats early by doubling to left center and advancing to third on a CSU misplay. Dunn then scored on a passed ball to put the first marker on the board for the Lady Eagles.

Meanwhile, Miller was cruising, as she pitched en route to her three-strikeout, three-hit day.

Up 5-1 in the bottom of the sixth inning, the Lady Eagles scored more insurance runs behind Jen Harris, who after an RBI single, stole second, third and home to put the final run on the board.

"This is nice," Kirkland said. "Anytime you can go out and play good defense and give yourself a chance to win, then it is nice."

"I think our bats have been there. Scoring runs wins games, but the part that has been hurting us is the physical errors that we've been making on defense. But I think we are getting better."

Flemming hit 2-for-2 at the plate for GSU, while Dunn went 1-for-3.

said. "Before I was putting too much pressure on myself and today I relaxed, did what I could to do and let my teammates back me up on defense."

Although the Eagles got the win, GSU head coach Jack Stallings wasn't exactly happy with all he saw in the contest.

"I was pleased with the pitching, but offensively we're just not thinking very well," said Stallings. "There were several opportunities where we had the chance to score, but the hitters weren't thinking clearly and not adjusting to what the situation at that time called for."

Stallings was pleased however with Watson's hit in the ninth to close the door on the Pirates chance to win.

"Watson has swung the bat well and has been doing what he is supposed to, and even when he gets out, he has had some good cuts," Stallings said.

The Eagles return home to face the South Carolina Gamecocks on Thursday at 4 p.m.

Look in next Tuesday's G-A sports pages for the latest on the GSU softball and baseball teams, as they prepare for their upcoming conference schedules.

Students jump for the American Heart Association

By Ni'Cole Patterson
Staff Writer

Jump, jump, jump. Everybody Jump was the name of the game at the Tenth Annual Jump Rope for Heart Benefit last Wednesday in the Hanner Fieldhouse.

GSU students raised money by exemplifying their jump rope skills.

The money raised went to the American Heart Association and Dee Ramsey's Early Childhood Education program.

There were 70 participants and they raised more than $1,000 in donations.

Ramsey says that donations are still coming in from different organizations.

Part of the proceeds will go toward the American Heart Association to continue research for different diseases.

The other half will go to the American Alliance of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, an organization in the Early Childhood Education department.

"It was interesting to see that some GSU students are not just wrapped up in themselves," Makisha Boddie, a GSU student, said. "I was happy to see that people gave up their time to jump

Students jumped away Wednesday night at the Tenth Annual Jump Rope for Heart Benefit to aid the fight against heart disease.

Participants who collected between $15 and $75 will receive prizes.

Prizes include a free t-shirt, water bottle and a jump rope.

"It was an exciting event," Tina Manefree, a freshman jumper, said. "I had fun because I was jumping for a worthy cause."

Students who are eligible for prizes can pick them up in two to four weeks in the Hollis Building in room 2118-A.

Although there were not a lot of participants, Ramsey said that the program was an overall success. "I am very pleased that the students jumped for such a worthy cause," Ramsey said. "I know a couple of students who had heart transplants and they believe that this benefit is necessary. Heart disease is the number one killer in the United States and everyone is affected by it."

Although participation was low, those who did participate were dedicated.

When Casey Bradley's entire team failed to show up, he jumped the entire time with one arm in a sling.

NAHB building experience for the future

By Rodney Reid
Staff Writer

So, you are a building, contracting and construction major. You want to gain experience and connections in the building construction field.

But where to begin?

Well, GSU's National Association of Home Builders student chapter just might be the steppingstone you're looking for. The NAHB was recently founded in the early 90s.

It currently consists of about 25-30 student members but is hoping to expand its membership.

The group is headed up by Jim Sopher.

He oversees the club's involvement in many community projects.

Recently, the club lent their hands to help out Habitat for Humanity.

They aided in the construction of homes for disadvantaged families in the Statesboro area.

They also collected food for Thanksgiving, which they donated to the local Housing Authority.

In the upcoming future the club will be taking part in a drive by Family Values to collect clothes.

They will also be building clothing racks for needy families in Statesboro.

Six of the NAHB members recently attended the Builders Show in Houston, Tex.

This event was sponsored by the National Association of

"YOU WILL BE ABLE TO GAIN HANDS-ON EXPERIENCE, LEADERSHIP SKILLS AND PARTICIPATION IN NAHB LOOKS GOOD ON YOUR RESUMÉ."

Home Builders.

Sopher, Ben Hogan, Brian Adams, John Martin, Jim Porter, Jennifer Stokes and faculty advisor Bill Zabel were all able to take part in many of the events throughout the four-day trip.

These events offered chances to attend educational seminars, view demonstrations and attend a job fair.

But the main purpose of the trip was to observe the NAHB Student Chapter Construction Management Competition.

Since GSU will be submitting an entry to next year's competition, the delegates used this year's competition as a way to view the competition.

"It was an excellent way to network with students and professionals from the building construction field," Sopher said about the trip.

The NAHB hopes to gain more freshman and sophomore participation in the club so it will have a strong leadership and recruiting base in years to come.

"Young students need to get involved before they become seniors," Sopher said. "You will be able to gain hands-on experience, leadership skills and participation in NAHB looks good on your resumé."

Membership to GSU's NAHB chapter is open to any BCC major.

The club encourages anyone interested in joining to please contact Sopher or Zabel at 681-0191.

KELLEY MCGONNELL

This transplanted Yankee will never leave the South

I was born and raised a Yankee. My parents call Pennsylvania home. It doesn't get much more Yankee than that. Oh wait, it does. I am related to two of William Tecumseh Sherman's generals. Yes, that's right. My ancestors burned their way through Georgia.

Well, I call Georgia home. It is where I did the majority of my real maturing. My dad is in the Navy, so I spent my entire life moving from one place to another. Navy brats never really have a hometown of their own. All the Navy brats I know claim to be from wherever their favorite grandparent lives.

I consider myself a Southerner, and my dad really hates that. But think about it. I sure do sound like a Southerner and I have for eight years now. Even when I go home to visit my Yankee family, my Rebel accent is out in full force.

And I'm an Atlanta Braves fan. This might not seem like a big deal, but I was raised a New York Yankees fan. My dad used to take me and my sisters to Yankee Stadium on Old Timer's Day, but during last year's World Series, I cheered for the Braves. If that isn't betraying my roots, I don't know what is.

But I still do hold on to a few things Northern. I love hockey, which is not exactly popular down South. But UGA has a hockey team, so I don't even have to leave the state to enjoy my favorite sport.

I also love winter. Georgia is not exactly known for the amount of snow it gets each winter. Yet this does not make me want to live above the Mason-Dixon line. The closer I get to it, the more unhappy I am.

So I'll stay right where I am, in the land where everyone understands Jeff Foxworthy's accent and country music stations abound. If I really miss the winters, I guess I'll turn up the air conditioning and watch the Flyers on Sports South.

GSU students help rebuild a church

GSU students helped to rebuild Gay's Hill Baptist Church in Millen,

By Ebony Brown
Staff Writer

The stories of the burnings of black churches ran rampant through the media and the lives of many Americans.

It is rare that people feel they can make a difference when something like this happens.

Last year Gay's Hill Baptist Church in Millen, Ga. was burned down. It is suspected to be just one church burning in a chain of racially motivated crimes.

Last month GSU students were given a chance to help rebuild the church and they did not hesitate. Southern Commons Area Director, Barbara Dyer transported the students to the church as an opportunity to satisfy their five-hour community service requirements for the Success-In-U program.

Smoke-damaged walls, shattered windows and a condemned roof symbolized the broken security and shaken faith shared by members of the congregation and the Millen community.

"I was so shocked," Grant Dudley, a volunteer, said. "You hear about it happening on the news. Then you hear it has happened thirty minutes away from you."

Although fulfilling the community service requirements might have been the prime motive for some students to help rebuild the church, perceptions quickly changed upon arrival.

"It made me feel good," Dudley said. "It was one of the best experiences I've ever had."

The students spent seven hours hammering, framing and sheeting the roof of the church.

Not only did the student volunteers share a sense of inspiration while rebuilding the church, but they also helped restore hope in the community.

"Volunteering is really important," Dyer said. "It makes the volunteers feel good about giving back to their community. The people that they are helping are really appreciative and feel blessed that people came out to help in their difficult situation."

Almost too often students will have little compassion for distant tragedies because they may feel that it is not their problem.

"Stuff happens in the news, but you really don't get the real effect until you are there," Patricia Braddock, a freshman at GSU, said.

Volunteering is rewarding because it spreads happiness to those who are helped and those who are helping.

Each nail hammered, each door framed and every roof sheeted represented a piece of hope and inflammable strength displayed by the efforts of the Millen and GSU community.

If you are interested in volunteering, please call Hilda Dutrow at 764-6609.

Kip Corbin named as Miss GSU 1997

By Tia Martin
Staff Writer

The tension was high, the excitement was intense, and 15 nervous beauties prepared for what was about to take place, the 49th annual Miss Georgia Southern University Scholarship pageant.

This year's theme was "All Aboard," and the 15 contestants opened the show to a bouncy and fun rendition of "Chattanooga Choo-Choo." The dance and song number was choreographed by Gail Hershey-Branch.

The court consisted of, Miss GSU 1997-1998, Kip Corbin, a senior nursing major. First-runner up was Miss Lisa Lunsford, a junior.

Second-runner up was Miss Shenica Bridges, who is also a junior. Third-runner up was Miss Christal Watson, a freshman and fourth-runner up was Miss Allison Colson, also a freshman.

There were also winners from each of the individual categories which included interview, talent, evening gown and swimsuit. Miss Congeniality was Erica Gordon.

Miss Swimwear was Rebekah Davis and Miss Talent was Lisa Lunsford.

Awards included a $1,000 grant in aid, gift certificates to a variety of stores in Statesboro and a beautiful trophy for Miss GSU. There were also gift certificates, roses and trophies for all the runners-up.

The contestants were judged by six judges with a variety of backgrounds.

"All the girls got along really well," Teresa Beebe, pageant director, said. "Everyone helped each other so much."

Beebe, who is also the special events coordinator for GSU, was assisted by student David Van Tassel. This was Beebe's second year directing the show.

Beebe admits that she was a little nervous at first when she was told that part of her job as activities director was coordinating the Miss GSU pageant.

"I knew nothing about pageants," Beebe said.

But after two years of very successful shows, Beebe is becoming an old pro.

Beebe believes the show was a success and looks forward to working with next year's contestants in GSU's 50th Miss Georgia Southern Pageant.

WEEKEND EXCURSIONS

Meander down the Panther Creek trail

By Chance Fulk
Staff Writer

Take the weekend off and hit the Panther Creek trail located only about four-and-a-half hours away into North Georgia.

Whether you're a trekker or a stroller, this trail is pleasant for anyone.

This 5.5-mile trail is loaded with cascading waterfalls.

Panther Creek Falls is located 3.6 miles east or down the trail from the trailhead.

The falls cascade through a series of miniature falls.

Leaving the trailhead, the trail follows Panther Creek downstream and enters a miniature gorge.

The trail is filled with strands of white pine and hemlocks that overhang the rocky bluffs of the whitewater stream.

The trail ends at the junction of Davidson and Panther Creeks.

While this is an easy to moderate trail, backpackers carrying heavy packs should take caution when traversing the rocky overhangs.

Backcountry bridges are available at all water crossings along the trail.

Camping is allowed in the Chattahoochee National Forest, but campsites must be 50 yards away from any body of water.

This trail, like most, has no facilities, so be prepared. Remember to use no trace/low impact traveling and camping methods when in the backcountry.

Take only pictures and leave only footprints.

For more information, contact the Chattooga Ranger District at (706)754-6221.

Directions to the Panther Creek trailhead:

Take I-16 north to I-75 then north to I-285. Take I-285 north-east to I-85 north. Exit onto I-85, take it until it ends at U.S. 23/441. Take U.S. 23/441 10 miles north of Clarksville to the Panther Creek Recreation Area.

BMOC fights breast cancer

By Michael Hamburger
Staff Writer

The battle against breast cancer is more than $3,000 closer to victory thanks to the efforts of Zeta Tau Alpha.

ZTA held its 11th Annual Big Man On Campus contest on Wednesday, Feb. 19 in the Union Ballroom.

The proceeds went to support ZTA's national philanthropy, the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation.

Allison Nunnally, ZTA's fundraising coordinator, estimates proceeds were more than $3,000. This is the most money the event has ever raised.

Nunnally attributes such success to the support of the fraternities and sororities on campus, as well as an overwhelming amount of non-Greeks.

The evening was emceed by Frank Fortune and Benjy Thompson of the Downright Brothers Band. The tag-team partners' antics kept the audience in stitches all evening.

Plaques were awarded to the Greek organizations with the highest percentage in attendance. The fraternity winner was Sigma Pi and the sorority winner was Kappa Kappa Gamma.

The BMOC contest was filled with entertaining moments. The newly crowned Miss GSU 1997, Kip Corbin, performed her ventriloquist act.

She was followed by three stepshows. Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. performed. They were followed by the Ice Cold Brothers of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc.

The defining moment of the successful evening was the performance given by the sisters of

Michael Hamburger

Gordo Grant doing his best "Baywatch" imitation in the swimwear portion of the 11th Annual ZTA Big Man On Campus contest.

Zeta Tau Alpha. This unprecedented performance brought down the house, being the first from a white Greek organization at GSU. The performance sparked invitations to participate in step shows throughout Georgia.

"The evening sparked a feeling of unity among fraternities and sororities, both black and white," Jane Campaigne, Greek advisor, said.

The 14 contestants were judged on Activity, Swimwear and Formal Wear Revues. The evening's highlights included Travis Black's Disco Formal Wear outfit and Gordo Grant's "Baywatch" lifeguard bathing suit.

The fourth runner-up was Lenny Inzirillo, representing Pi Kappa Alpha. Third runner-up was Bobby West who represented Alpha Omicron Pi. Herb Milner, of Kappa Alpha, finished as second runner-up. Gordo Grant, representing Kappa Kappa Gamma, finished as first runner-up. The title of BMOC was taken home by Alpha Delta Pi's representative, Brad Inglesby.

'The Trip' captures the true essence of unconditional love and self-discovery while raising awareness

By Tia Martin
Staff Writer

Four women on a journey half-way across America not only discover the truth about themselves but discover the truth about one another.

This was the story line for "The Trip," a play by Crystal V. Rhodes.

Through the play, Rhodes explores the theme of black women searching for sisterhood but this theme also runs throughout the lives of white men and women.

The play was performed Feb. 20 at 7 P.M. at the Southern Center for Continuing Education.

"The Trip" was directed by GSU's own Stephanie Ray, director of the office of Multi-Cultural Programs.

"As African-American women, it is important that we search for the true meaning of our lives," Ray says.

The character "Nikki" was played by Brandi Hayes, a senior apparel manufacturing major.

"Victoria" was played by Saudia J. Abdullah, a senior justice studies major.

"Joanne" was portrayed by Tawanna Collins, a junior public relations major.

"Ginny" was brought to life by Kwaseera Dixie, a junior early childhood education major.

This play addresses economic backgrounds, male and female relationships and the need for friendship.

Rhodes took serious issues within the lives of these four women and made it humorous.

Each character had a distinct personality type that everyone could relate to.

"AS AFRICAN-AMERICAN WOMEN, IT IS IMPORTANT THAT WE SEARCH FOR THE TRUE MEANING OF OUR LIVES."

—STEPHANIE RAY,
DIRECTOR

There was someone's mother, sister, or friend in one of those characters.

"Nikki" is the quiet sensitive one. She takes a lot from those around her and often needs someone to defend her.

In the end, she realizes her self-worth and decides she won't be anyone's doormat.

"Ginny" is the friend who has been defending Nikki all her life. Ginny is the "goodie" of the group who seems perfect in every way. Ginny realizes that she too has flaws.

"Victoria" is the "down to earth" friend who tells it like it is, but has a hard time being told about her own shortcomings.

"Joanne" is the "big mouth" of the group. She prides herself on how much materialistic wealth she has. The audience soon discovers that the way she came about her wealth leaves nothing to be desired.

A sense of compassion can be felt for each woman.

Many of the issues dealt with hit home with African-American women but also for people of all racess and of both sexes.

The ending was different than expected. Each woman realized her own flaws but did not change or try to be a better friend.

"Sisters should start listening to one another," Ray said.

This play showed why it is important to listen to one another.

Black Awareness Month has brought diversity, culture and most importantly awareness to the campus of GSU.

Well, the Black Awareness Month committee did it again.

They definitely brought some awareness to the women of GSU.

Unfortunately, not many students attended the show.

Those who did miss it missed something serious.

Life doesn't always have a happy ending and this play shows that clearly.

Diamond Girls: support wing of Eagle Baseball

By Shana Johnson
Staff Writer

We've all heard that diamonds are a girl's best friend, but can they be a man's?

They can if the diamond in question is a member of GSU's Diamond Girls.

The Diamond Girls are the baseball team's assistants who do everything from selling tickets to managing equipment.

"We're the support wing of Eagle Baseball," Holly Ford, Diamond Girl captain, said. "The team couldn't operate without us."

This is not an exaggeration. The Diamond Girls work in the stands taking tickets, on the field with players from both home and visiting teams and they meet with game officials.

They get the bats off the field and make sure the umpires always have enough balls for the pitchers.

They also assist in the dug-outs, sell programs and watch out for foul balls.

In addition, they help with the activities between innings.

The girls are also in charge of the pass list.

Each player is allowed to give four free passes to scouts or friends and relatives.

These people are put on the pass list and allowed in for free.

Off the field, the girls are heavily involved with Homeruns for Humanity and Reading is Fundamental.

Homeruns for Humanity donates money to Habitat for Humanity for every Eagle homerun hit during the season.

The girls also coordinate social activities with the baseball team. They have a secret pal program every season.

Basically, they spoil the players with their favorite snacks, drinks and other special treats.

At the end of the season, the

Mike Spilker

GSU's Diamond Girls aid the university baseball team on and off the field. The girls are vital to the baseball program by helping with equipment management and organizing social functions.

girls hold a social and reveal the secret identities of the secret pals.

At this time, the players get a chance to thank the girls for all they have done during the year.

The Diamond Girls also sponsor socials with the team including a Christmas social.

They also attend the annual baseball banquet.

In addition, they are responsible for hanging signs at the games and filling the role of cheerleader.

This year the Diamond Girls will be working at the Southern Conference Tournament at The Citadel and are hoping for a spot at the College World Series.

Obviously, these women should not be referred to as ordinary "bat girls."

They are so much more.

"We are very professional," Ford said. "Aside from UGA, we are the only school to have this kind of organization. GSU doesn't sponsor us. This is a private, self-sufficient, self-sustaining organization."

But the Diamond Girls are more than just another organization.

"There is a real sense of sisterhood among the girls and a bond with the coaches and players," Ford said. "It's a family thing."

And just what does it take to be a Diamond Girl?

"Enthusiasm, personality and a willingness to work," Ford said.

There is a process to ensure they are getting truly dedicated and professional women.

First, there is an information session where interested students can sign up to be interviewed.

The interview session is held with the coaches, some players and a professional baseball player who made his start at GSU.

Generally 30 girls are picked so that the responsibilities can be rotated.

"We have about four games a week and about 13 girls per home game and four on away games," Ford said.

"Being a Diamond Girl is a good opportunity to meet people, get recommendations and make life-long friends," she said.

The girls love their team.

"We're really proud of our players," Ford said. "We have the best coaching staff. They're awesome and we're looking forward to a terrific season. We expect nothing less."

The Diamond Girls will be looking for new members next fall, so keep an eye out for more information.

Every week we feature a profile of a student or an organization. If you know of a group or individual who should be "In the Spotlight" contact Kelley McGonnell in room 223 of the Williams Center or call The George-Anne at 681-5246.

the Pittsburgh Penguins.

"This year's conference had one of the most powerful line up of speakers we have offered to date. It proved to be a good experience, and a great opportunity for everyone involved," McCarthy said. Allen amazed the audience with his story of success.

Allen had worked as an accountant for Arthur Andersen before opening his own accounting firm, but he said he was still unhappy because he felt he wasn't doing something that he really loved.

Eventually Allen left the partnership for a non-paid position with the Columbus Clippers, a minor league baseball team.

"I was literally wrapping hotdogs for the games, doing anything I could to get experience in sports," Allen said.

Later Marge Schott, owner of the Cincinnati Reds, was looking for someone to take over an accounting position, and a friend of Allen's recommended him for the position.

After getting the job, Allen would go on to become the chief financial officer for the Reds.

After the suspension of Schott by Major League Baseball, Allen was appointed interim CEO for a 60-day period.

Just 45 days into his appointment, Allen had made several changes in the organization by hiring minorities for the first time in the club's history.

He made several other changes in the operations of the team as well, which resulted in a 30 percent increase in fan attendance.

"I just wanted to do what was right," Allen said. "That is one of the things that I would stress to those wanting to enter the sports area."

There were more than 220 attendees at the conference representing schools as far away as the University of Nevada at Las Vegas, the University of Iowa and George Washington University.

One of the participants from University of Iowa drove 17 hours to attend the conference.

"I knew it would be worth the opportunity. How often do you get a chance to meet and establish yourself, even pass along your resumé directly to the decision makers," the Iowa student said.

who was responsible for getting financial aid checks to students during the university's switch over to the BANNER system.

"Had it not been for the outstanding job Ms. Pierce did with the BANNER system, I don't think we would have had the financial aid distributed," he said. "The university and students are beholden to her for the job she did here."

PIERCE

"As a result of her hard work, she became such an expert on BANNER for the company and they hired her away from Georgia Southern," Nolen said.

He said that it was Pierce that will use corporate sponsors at a national level, Ehling said.

CRI is also trying to get donations from alumni to add into their budget and GSU is aiding CRI in ways outside of direct funding.

"They [GSU] have made a big commitment to campus recreations," Ehling said. "But now, there is a need for a different type of support. We are lobbying with the university to get some additional support."

The leveling off of GSU's growth in enrollment has led to the recent addition of fees, Nolen said.

"What students don't realize is that the growth generated new dollars, so we didn't have to go back to the students," Nolen said. "Now, the growth has leveled off but not enough to generate significant dollars."

Without fee increases, the student activities budget committee would have to decrease the budgets of student programs due to a lack of funds, Nolen said.

State government may be near an apology for Tuskegee Experiment

By Tara Meyer
The Associated Press

ATLANTA — The government may be close to a formal apology for the infamous Tuskegee experiment in which black men were withheld treatment for syphilis so researchers could study how the disease spread and killed.

"That's the kind of thing we would anticipate, but we don't know at this point what would happen," Satcher said.

The experiment was conducted in Tuskegee, Ala., between 1932 and 1972.

The government withheld treatment from 399 men with syphilis to study the disease's course.

The men weren't told they had the disease. Nor were they given penicillin after it became the standard treatment in 1947.

The study became public in 1972 with a story by The Associated Press.

It spawned a distrust among the black community for public health officials and forced government agencies to take a closer look at their research practices.

Dr. Louis W. Sullivan, former U.S. health secretary and now president of Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta, said it would take a monumental effort for the government to regain the trust of black people.

"This is not going to be easy and it's not going to happen overnight," Sullivan said. "Twenty years later, we are still wrestling with the damage that's been done. Science needs to be open."
